In fact, such fausticism as remains on opinions secures a thorough discussion, and these questions is due in a very large measure to whethes the popular imagination. However wrong nnother cause. The persecution of beretics was they may be, they may hit the weak point of a partly a trenchant form of logic to convince doctrine which requires modification to meet new them that their rendoning was erroneous; but it was partly also a device for convincing the persecutors that they were infallible. When you have burnt a min for denying a proposition. you believe that it must be true. Next to being a martyr yourself, the best encouragement of sincerity is to morter your neighbour. A reflex question was to be ascertained by striking a action is set up like that which convinces au lightenal liar of the truth of his own stories. Indeed, the plan is not so unreasonable as a heaty consideration would suggest. Belief is propagated much more by contagion then by argument: there is scarcely any doctrine so firmly rooted two roads, it is gonerally a mistake to try to hit in our minds that we do not begin to doubt it of a line somewhere between them. There was when persons of apparent probity and information assert the contrary: from which it follows that if we could summarily remove such persons we more to be said for complete toleration; but to should amazingly strengthen the tenacity of our own faith. The old story about the lion on Northum'rerland House wagging bistail to the conviction of a numerous audicace embodies a truth which is constantly verified. Men who livelong munivilized countries imbibathenstive anneratitions imperceptibly; and a compulsory residence in Shropshire would probably convince Mr. Mill it did not drive him mad by forcing upon him and not partly angels and partly demons. But prising a superficial area of about 19,000 square the conclusion that the laws of logic have only the use of fanatics in securing the broadest disthat Mr. Eyro is a model Governor—if indeed a limited geographical validity. The nower of cussion of general principles is underiable, and repeated assertion in producing conviction is so not the less so because, after all, the fanatice great that the number of conversions to any are a far smaller tribe than the lukewarm and oninion which is pincerely and strongly held is limited much more by the passive resistance of fuert indifference than by any notive scepticism. Houses. Lands, Tenements, &c. This in the chief motive of that imbordiente form of fanatism which occurs in literary and artistic discussions. If a man believes Shaka. neuro to be a humbug, or Raffaelle to be an oversited man, one would emprose that he might sussert bis opinion without offences it is merely an expression of individual apinion, and even if it proved him to be blind or stupid, those who enjoy list of July next. and mental or bodily eyesight ought to regard him with compassion. If a man does not uppresinto good wine, but prefets thick black public-house port, men with good palates have no cause of quarrel-with him. Yet, as a matter of fact, they are often fiercely indignant. The proverb that there is no disputing about tastes must be interpreted to mean that such disputes are never settled; for they are really amongst the bitterest and most interminable of all disnature. And the remon is that a man cannot questioned, the chances are that he will doubt he fast of his own anjoyment. A curious example of the indignation excited inder somewhat similar circumstances was given when a gentleman threw a doubt some years hack, upon the behaviour of the moon: ic asserted that the ordinary mathematical account of her performances was; in some sense erroneous. Real mathematicians were of course amused, though rather insulted. But the goneral public warn seriously indignant; they felt that their faith in the very foundations of science with being supped. If the moon went wrong, I Gough Street, at present occupied by we might find out next that the sun, was going | Messre. Mangesson & Co. round the sirth, and, if so, no one could answer even for the simple rules of arithmetic. A similar outburst of feeling is excited when any one rightly questions the claim to perfection of ous of our nutional idole, and pormits himself to point out faults in Shakspeare or scientific lefects in Lord Bacon. We hold up our hands in horror, and raise our loudest claimours against this professor of our Walhalls. It is difficult to believe that this is merely due to inferest in the broklers offonders our annermoe is much too keen to be so explained. We really feel aggrieved because our own faith is weakened; we four that we shall no longer take pleasure in the metry and the wisdom which we had accapted as genuine, and the simple fact of other perions being profane makes it impossible for ns to be reverent. It was one advantage about the false code of the heathen that their worshippara dould afford to be mutually tolerante one | Desitanted in Bowrington East, each containgentleman's faith in his block of wood did not ing5,000 Piculs capacity, having Water frontage. hinder another from believing in his lump of Apply to DORABJEE NOWROJEE, sione: each ided night have its own sphere of infinance and its own sent of worshippers. But this is by no tasans the case with our modern objects of worship. This uneasy desire to fortify our own convictions by persecuting our neighbours is not indead the sole cause of fanaticism: Taken by itself it can only produce intolerance, and make us anxious, to suppress the innovators who are frombling our fixed convictions. But, in a different combination, it communicates the house on the Praya, next to the Oriental Bank. peculiar harshuss to enthusiasm which changes it into genuine funaticism. People who really halieve in the truth of their leading principles are not so anxious that their neighbours should he forced, by foul meuns or fair, to swallow every jot and tittle of their doctrines. It is the arranicion, perhans almost unconscionaly enter- be seen at No. 53; Wyndhum Street, trined, that any discussion upon an outlying dogma may shake the whole fabric of their creeds, which makes people so nervously anxious to insist upon the recention of the smallest details. In the case of rollgious fanalicism, there was a rood pretoxt for such anxiety. Mahommedans, for example, received their whole evident of belief upon the same superhuman authority; if converts were permitted to mestion anything they might end by recriving nothing; and they were therefore rather defensive than aggressive. The most determined modern fanatios are those who proforsedly ground their belief upon philosophy. and should therefore be willing to welcome less thorough-going converts; but they are, so far as officed times adjuit, almost as exacting in their WRH immediate possession, those spacious and not exceeddemands. If a man draws back or hesitates to W GODOWNS situated upon the Praya, bolt the strongest tests sulmitted to him, he in looked upon an unsound, and visited with stern moral condempation. The modern fanatic is indeed in outward appearance as different as possible from his ancient prototype : there is nothing about him of the ferocious and halfincane appearance which delights painters and novelists. He does not lard his talk with Scripture phruses, and propose appeals to the sword of the Lord and of Gideon. Fe is much more likely to talk a jargon derived from the founder of Positivism. He is very probably d gentleman of singularly mild manners, with a tendency to spectacles and premature baldness: be puts forward sentiments which would make the hair of the orthodox or the voice of almost femining, softucia. In short, we now produce fanatios chiefly of the Robespierre type; not men animated by uncontrolliable and uncouth zeal, but calm calculators, who are prepared to accept any responsibility to which their logic may lead them, and to cut of heads as coolly as a mathematician would set about climinating an inconvenient quantity

But they are also useful because, though even their firmest supporters think btorage in first class GRANITE GODOWNS them cather paradoxical, their theories are very on moderate terms. often strictly accurate. There is a general projudice against extreme opinions, as if they were necessarily wrong, and as if the truth of every mean between the most conflicting views; and most men shrink from them, unless they have the fauntical contagion. But it is only of semall number of discussions that this is even approximately true. When there is a choice between something to be said for persecuting thoroughly and systematically, and there is a good deal persecute a little, as the moderate men would have hall it, is the silliest of all plane. In this case the extremest riew is universally admitted to be the right one, although it might have been impracticable to obtain its recognition; and certainly its advocates would ut one time have been called fanatical. In matters of practice they are less likely to be in licious, because men Wellington and Gags Streets, and of two hundred
